Excerpt from A Voyage Up the Persian Gulf: And a Journey Overland From India to England, in 1817, Containing Notices of Arabia Felix, Arabia Deserta, Persia, Mesopotamia, the Garden of Eden, Babylon, Bagdad, Koordistan, Armenia, Asia Minor, &C. &C

As this is the first time of my adventuring myself on the opinion of the public, I am not exactly aware of the degree of importance that can entitle a work to the advantages of a proemial discourse; it is, therefore, more in deference to my readers than to the work itself, I esteem it necessary to premise, that a simple introduction is the end I have in view: whilst in the following pages, a plain narration of facts must have been my only purpose, had I consulted my own inclinations in describing what I have seen.

Amongst the indulgent friends, however, whose kind encouragement suggested the undertaking, a very great variety of feelings of interest and curiosity, has led me to extend my views; as I found I could not otherwise have embraced their different tastes, or satisfied their favourite enquiries.

A presumption, of which I feel the weight, whenever I diverge from the direct course I had originally laid down for the arrangement of my notes, will, I trust, therefore, meet with some indulgence; for if I have soared above my strength, it has only been in my anxiety to please.
